Intro Practicing law means being comfortable with ambiguity. It involves telling clients, partners and strangers at cocktail parties “it depends” – it depends on the facts of the case, the jurisdiction, the individual judge, the terms and conditions, and more. One thing you can know with absolute certainty is that you’ll thrive and survive in law school with tons of planning ...

Legal research is "the process of identifying and retrieving information necessary to support legal decision-making. In its broadest sense, legal research includes each step of a course of action that begins with an analysis of the facts of a problem and concludes with the application and communication of the results of the investigation."

Use the tabs to find legal literature by type or jurisdiction. Most of these pages are about sources - they are annotated lists of indexes and full-text databases, print sources and other useful things. My aim is to guide you through your options, much as I talk you through them in a class, or if you come to see me.

Statutes are laws written and enacted by the legislative branch of government. Most new laws are created through statutes (as opposed to being created by judges through case opinions); therefore, it is important that you realize that you will frequently begin your research projects by looking at a statute, rather than at cases.
