to light who we are As humans we naturally focus more on identifying differences between us no matter how small they are Prosanta demystifies this notion to emphasize our similarities with each other than many of us are willing to believe As more and more people take ancestry tests sending their DNA samples and money to genealogy testing centres we need to be educated on what the results actually mean scientifically and we all have to decide together what it means socially We should be celebrating the fact that this diversity comes from the same little drops of water and sunlight each just shining a little differently Like all species we are defined by our differences as much as by our similarities Prosanta encourages us to think of life as being this book which is always in the making We are just only seeing the last few pages of each chapter If you look out on the eight million species that we share this planet with think of them all being four billion years of evolution They re all the product of that Think of us all as young leaves on this ancient and gigantic tree of life all of us connected by invisible branches not just to each other but to our extinct relatives and our evolutionary ancestors Evocative comprehensive and argumentative this is a must read and reread a book which will compel you to imagine and reimagine life around us
