Barber, Education Commission of the States, 1983* Reward in a Merit Pay District Michael Francis Griffin, 1978 ABSTRACT A Study of Methods of Teacher Evaluation for Merit Pay Audrey L. Gill, 1962 Merit Pay Programs for Teachers Stayner Frates Brighton, Cecil J. Hannan, 1962 Paying for Better Teaching Samuel B. Bacharach, David B. Lipsky, Joseph B. Shedd, 1984 President Reagan s promotion of merit pay as the main vehicle of educational change has prompted a sharp debate This monograph presents arguments for and against merit pay and assesses its relative worth as a means of improving American education First merit pay is defined as a compensation system linking individual teachers salaries to performance evaluations New style merit pay ties salaries to students standardized test scores instead of to teachers classroom activities Merit pay differs from master teacher plans aimed at increasing hierarchical complexity to construct better career paths for teachers Merit pay can provide monetary incentives rewards feedback administrative controls over the teaching process and retention and recruitment benefits Arguments against merit pay outweigh advantages pay for performance systems overemphasize teachers need for extrinsic rewards and motivators may negatively affect desire for high performance foster teacher rivalry and pose administrative burdens associated with defining and evaluating superior teaching Overall costs and union resistance are even thornier problems Several alternatives are discussed including reforms and exceptions within the unitary salary schedule career promotions and goal oriented management and participation systems compatible with effective schools research This literature emphasizes cooperative agreements and mutual problem solving as keys to changing school management Appendices include synopses of recommendations of major reports on education 1983 and three sets of data on teacher salaries in relation to salaries in other occupations A bibliography with 57 references is also included MLH Merit Pay and the Evaluation Problem Richard J. Murnane,1985 Merit, Money and Teachers' Careers Henry C. Johnson,1985-08-12 Merit Pay, Teacher Evaluation and Motivation Marjorie Schuster Spaedy,1985 The Relationship Between Student Achievement, Teacher Effectiveness, Merit Pay, and Selective Teacher Demographics in a Rural School District Jill Webb Faulkner,2019 Teacher merit pay has become popular among policymakers to meet accountability mandates related teacher effectiveness and student achievement Legislation at the federal level has provided grants and financial incentives to state and local districts to implement merit pay plans In 2013 Tennessee required all districts to develop a differentiated compensation plan by revising an earlier differentiated compensation policy from 2008 With more rigorous standards and testing at the forefront of education reform in Tennessee the rural school district in this study developed a strategic compensation plan with bonus pay based on student test scores as one of the components The purpose of this causal comparative study was to examine the effect of teacher merit pay levels on teacher effectiveness and student achievement within a rural school district The study also will consider if there is a difference among the teacher effectiveness levels and student achievement scores and certain moderating variables including content area years of experience gender and education level The participants involved in this study were teachers and students of English I English II Algebra I and Algebra II of the only high school in the district Chi square analysis found that higher teacher effectiveness may have a positive relationship with higher bonuses One way ANOVA analysis determined student achievement scores were significantly lower when the teacher did not qualify for a bonus than at any and every other bonus level Linear regression analyses found significant moderation effects for years of experience education level and content area but not for teacher gender The study highlights the need for conclusive evidence in support of merit based pay before leaders expand upon the compensation plan Keywords merit pay performance pay incentive pay student achievement accountability teacher evaluation teacher effectiveness Teachers' Perceptions of Merit Pay in Georgia Jessica Glisson Edenfield,2014 Author s abstract This study explored the perceptions of implementing a merit pay plan as reported by elementary teachers in three rural Georgia school districts one of which was participating in the Race to the Top RT3 initiative The study examined the perceptions of 109 elementary teachers in regard to merit pay implementation models of merit pay factors worthy of reward and the impact that perceptions of school culture has on attitudes towards merit pay The study employed a descriptive survey approach to address the research questions An amended version of the Teacher Survey on Performance Pay was employed to explore the perceptions of participants The majority of responding teachers worked in the RT3 district Respondents were not in favor of the implementation of a merit pay plan and preferred raising the base salary of teachers The majority of respondents did not favor the presented models of merit pay although a school based plan received a higher response of agreement than the others Respondents indicated that a variety of factors beyond student achievement and teacher evaluations needed to be considered when awarding merit pay and reported unfavorable feelings toward Georgia s proposed formula Concerns regarding factors impacting student achievement were expressed along with frequent concerns for teachers of EIP and inclusion classes and how emphasis on student achievement may impact these areas Results also indicated that perceptions of school culture have no impact on attitudes towards merit pay Respondents reported positive views of school culture yet were not in favor of merit pay implementation Concerns arose regarding potential negative implications that merit pay may hold for school culture such as decreased collaboration and increased competitive feelings Based on comparisons overall responses from the RT3 district were similar to those of the other two districts who were not RT3 participants Neither district type was in favor of merit pay The results of the study indicated an overall negative view of merit pay by teachers with the destruction of the schools collaborative cultures being one of the top concerns Such feelings may be resolved if teachers are active participants when creating a merit pay plan
