A Strange Experience at the Office

When my children were small, I worked as a cleaner. I cleaned at a big block of offices near my home. It was an evening work, and it fitted well with my husband's job, so I never needed a nanny. I headed off on foot at 6:30pm three nights a week and worked a couple of hours. I didn't earn a fortune, but it paid for treats for the kids. One night, I was working on the second floor. I was mopping a corridor, it had a lot of offices along it. While I was progressing along the corridor, I heard loud shouting coming from the last office at the end of the corridor. Then, there was a huge crash, and someone was crying. Probably, he needed help, I thought. I knocked at the door, but there was no answer.

I waited a few seconds, and knocked again, but nobody answered, so I opened the door. I saw a complete mess because a huge clock fallen off the wall all the furniture was thrown around the room. I was confused and a bit scared, so I ran to find my colleague, who was cleaning on the third floor. We came back down into the messy room, but everything was fine. The clock was back on the wall and the desks and chairs were in the right place. I left my job that night. I still shudder when I think about this more than ten years later.
