

Football

History

It is thought that football originated in China with the modern game developing in Britain during the 19th century.

Football was taken up as a winter game between independent schools such as Eton and Winchester with graduates of these schools forming their own football clubs.

Often the rules would differ according to the school or club with some allowing partial handling of the ball.

After a series of matches being played between clubs in London and the surrounding counties, a printed set of rules was created in 1863. This disallowed the carrying of the ball.

By 1871, 15 clubs from around England received an offer from the Football Association to compete in a cup competition.

In 1921, women were banned from playing football. This ban was eventually lifted in 1971.

Rules

The rules of football differ according to your age. Some of the basic adult rules of football are:

- score more goals than the opposing team to win;
- players are allowed anywhere on the pitch;
- play with a ball with the correct specifications;
- a coin toss will determine which team kicks off;
- two halves are played of 45 minutes each, plus stoppage and injury time;
- only the goalkeeper can handle the ball.

Football is widely regarded as the most popular sport in the world. In some countries, such as the United States, Canada and Australia, it is also known as soccer.
