

container is constructed using thermocol sandwiched with aluminium foil. Thermocol, also known as expanded polystyrene foam, is a lightweight material with excellent insulating properties. By utilizing thermocol as the core material, the container can effectively minimize heat transfer from the external environment to the inside of the compartment.

The aluminium foil serves as a protective layer on both sides of the thermocol. Its reflective surface helps to reduce heat absorption and radiation, further enhancing the insulation capabilities of the container. The aluminium foil acts as a barrier, preventing external heat from entering the compartment and impeding the escape of cool air generated by the Peltier module. This insulation system ensures that the interior of the container maintains a stable and low temperature, providing optimal conditions for storing and transporting temperature-sensitive medicines.

The combination of thermocol and aluminium foil in the construction of the container interior effectively minimizes heat transfer, creating a thermally insulated environment. This insulation plays a crucial role in maintaining the desired temperature range and ensuring the integrity and efficacy of the medicines during transportation on a motorcycle.

FIG -12: Developed prototype so far

7. RESULT

The experimental setup aimed to achieve a temperature reduction from 28°C to 17.3°C within a one-hour timeframe using the designed container. The experimental results confirm that the container effectively achieved the desired temperature reduction and maintained a controlled and stable temperature within the specified timeframe. This successful outcome highlights the potential of the container for efficient medicine delivery, ensuring that temperature-sensitive medications can be transported safely and effectively on a motorcycle.

8. CONCLUSION

In this paper, the developed prototype of the efficient cold container for medicine delivery on a motorcycle, utilizing a thermoelectric cooling system, has shown promising results. The incorporation of multiple Peltier modules and cooler fans improved the cooling rate, leading to enhanced efficiency and accessibility. The use of Mild Steel as the primary material facilitated the construction process while maintaining the structural integrity of the container. Further research and development are recommended to refine the design and optimize the performance of the cold container for wider implementation in healthcare logistics.
