Robertson, 2016-09-14 Excerpt from The Literature of Germany It is essentially subjective German mediaeval poetry may not be as successful in making the golden Middle Age gorgeous upon earth again as other mediaeval literatures but it gives us more penetrating glimpses into the inner life of the denizen of the Middle Ages and thereby awakens a sympathetic interest in the modern reader Its interpretation again of that great new birth which we associate with the word Reformation appears in the still modern form Of a liberation of the individual from a world that took no stock of individuals Lastly the great German literature of the eighteenth century deals constantly with problems ethic as well as aesthetic which are as vital and Real to us today as they were to that far off time We have to accept frankly the comparative absence of the formal beauty which the Latin peoples of Europe can point to in their literatures Germany has no Dante Ariosto or Tasso no Lope de Vega no Corneille or Moliere but on the other hand her essential contribution to the wealth of the world s imagination has always centred in the interpretation Of heart and soul Her literature in spite of its broken endeavour its fragmentary incomplete ness possesses in this universal subjectivity a About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving
