Thomas, Jon Bartlett, Shirley A. Cox, 2006 Far from home far from home On Fraser River s shore So sang the miners at their sluice boxes at Emory s Bar during the Fraser River Gold Rush of 1858 British Columbians have always sung about their work and their recreation their politics their living conditions the good times and the bad This unique collection of songs spanning a period of seventy five years is a colorful documentary giving vivid glimpses into the social economic and political life of the province from the time of Captain Cook to the present Founding and honorary life member of the Vancouver Folk Song Society honorary president of the Canadian Folk Music Society Phil Thomas sings accompanies himself on a five string banjo or guitar and has for thirty years taught and been concerned with the spread of awareness and enjoyment of folk music

Songs of the Pacific Northwest David Harry Ellis, Philip J. Thomas, 2017 An illustrated behavioral ethogram for Golden Eagles and other raptors to help define behavioral descriptions and observations in the field of ornithology Every Seed Has a Song Madeline Moss, Fehlya Ehrlander, Rose Metting, 2023 Logging Songs of the Pacific Northwest Leslie Anne Johnson, Charles Everett Brewer, 2007 In 1938 Stewart Hall Holbrook lamented that he had not seen any decent academic study of the American lumberjack reason enough for his writing the book Holy Old Mackinaw A Natural History of the American Lumberjack Now nearly seventy years later there have been a few studies but usually with some sort of regional and liberal political or social focus by an outsider but still none from the conservative point of view of the logger himself or at least one who identifies closely with the logger Likewise there has been little research in the way of folk arts music in particular There are a few collections on the Northeast and Great Lakes regions but nothing for the Pacific Northwest defined as Idaho Oregon Washington and Alaska This thesis studies logging songs in the Pacific Northwest focusing on three artists who represent the area and who have been recognized at the national level for their works Buzz Martin Hank Nelson and Bob Antone Each of their chapters also includes collaborations with some of their closest associates The logging songs I discuss are neither labor songs nor work songs Instead they are a different type of occupational song one that is sung outside the work environment for the purpose of entertainment The succession of these three artists also reflects the gradual decline of the logging industry and its culture in the Pacific Northwest due to environmental political issues and increasing urbanization of the area This project has been animated by my personal experience growing up in a family of timber beasts in the Pacific Northwest
