

He objects to what the French call a "roman a these", the novel that is trying to prove something. Binet says you cannot prove anything with fiction. "My half-brother said it in my book. If you can fabricate fake evidence, then it's easy to demonstrate anything. This is my problem with historical fiction."

In HHhH, he takes issue with Jonathan Littell's The Kindly Ones, which follows an educated Nazi through World War II and won the Prix Goncourt.

He says Littell makes a parallel with the Greek myth of Orestes. "I didn't really understand the connection. Orestes is about remorse; he killed his mother. I don't see the link between remorse and the Nazis; they didn't have a lot of remorse. And the first sentence: 'O, my human brothers, let me tell you how it happened.' For me, it sounds like an attempt to say that you and me are the same as the Nazis."

He admits he has a contradiction because there are historical novels he admires deeply - War and Peace, for example, "but you don't read it to learn things about Napoleon". He cites Vasily Grossman's Life and Fate as "a classical novel with invented characters meeting real characters".

What he likes is that Grossman showed Stalinism to be as hard as Nazism, that he was very close to his subject - the Soviet writer was a journalist following the Red Army in World War II - and that he writes "the impossible scene, the gas chamber. He follows someone from beginning to the end.

"But I wouldn't dare do it. In my book, I just wrote a short chapter about a train going to Auschwitz but stopping at the gates. I wanted to mean with that that I won't get inside Auschwitz because I don't feel, as a novelist, I can."

Binet adheres to his method to the end when Gabeik and Kubis and their comrades, betrayed, are holed up in the crypt of the church of Saints Cyril and Methodius in Prague. "I am not Gabeik," he writes, "and I never will be. At the last second, I resist the temptation of the interior monologue and in doing so perhaps save myself from ridicule at this crucial point."

He began to write the account of the final Nazi assault on May 27, 2008 (the anniversary of the attack on Heydrich) and finished it on June 18, the date when the Germans prevailed. "The idea," Binet says, "was to make the reader feel that time is stretched."

Binet writes that he is coming to the end and that he feels completely empty. He had lived for so long with the characters and events. He wondered what he would do next. What he didn't realise was it was not the end of the story.

"The best proof is that I am still talking about it to you. I thought I would move out of that story and leave the characters. This is the reason of that last melancholic chapter. I don't want to leave them. I imagine I am on the boat with them and that scene that I avoided because I didn't know how they met. Finally, I just imagined how they could have met. It was a kind of nostalgic ending, but I didn't anticipate that it was not over at all because of the success of the book."
