

The Orator

c. 1916

68 ] This was the first sculpture I made after leaving the Erskinean Academy. After completing the top-right detail of drapery, I was so pleased with its results that I received a large dose of encouragement which made my work get better and better. Draperies are far harder to make in sculpture than in any, and since I refuse to study from models, I have had to "lean in" to memory instead of using what would have been before me to copy.

When the last World War started and my works were found near in the State building, someone fired a gun at the Orator's chest, leaving it. The bullet was actually aimed at me, but I was too far away and in another America.
