

Social Cognition and Prejudice: Stereotyping, Stereotype Activation

- There is now ample evidence that stereotypical trait information about a group can be automatically activated by exposure to a group-related stimulus
- Since most stereotypes of real groups are predominantly negative, the automatic activation of such stereotypes does not suggest that attempts to lessen any pernicious effects of those stereotypes would be very effective
- The activation and schematic operation of stereotypes would matter little if they were unrelated to prejudice
 - And perhaps hence also unrelated to discrimination
- Now we will discuss the possible relationship between the activation of negative stereotypes and prejudice
