

Social Cognition and Prejudice: Stereotyping, Stereotypes and Prejudice

- The implicit model in social cognition research of a simple, direct, unmediated pathway from stereotypes to prejudice is, thus too simple
- The pathway is conditional and bi-directional
 - Group-related stimuli only activate stereotypes when those stereotypes are contextually relevant
- The content of the activated stereotype is different for different people
 - Even though most people in any culture can readily identify the content of the social stereotypes pertaining to the major groups in that society
- And finally, people are differently prepared to suppress, modify, or leave alone stereotypic material once it is activated, depending on their beliefs and values about stereotyping itself
