Still Moments Zighen Aym, 2005 Like many immigrants who leave their native lands the author journeys from North Africa in search of his dreams and solace Yet he was not prepared to be a suspect of terrorist activities after the 9 11 events when ethnic profiling became both the norm and the rule An engineering analyst and freelance writer photographer he combines a special blend of anger and humor to tell his encounter with an Illinois state trooper and a subsequent call from the FBI The author depicts with finesse the traumatic interrogation that followed but naively learned that in such a situation there were several types of questions those he answered others he refused to answer and still others he pondered Skin color kicks on Route 66 in the post 9 11 period are woven in this laconic story about ethnic profiling cynical politics and lucrative hypocrisy This book could have been marketed under the title of I am not a Terrorist Mr Bush
