

The Media, Culture, and Religion Perspective: discovering a theory and methodology for studying media and religion

by Robert A. White

I. Introduction

The cultural studies analysis of the media has now become a dominant paradigm of communication research, and the "Media, Religion, and Culture" focus is a central paradigm in research on religious media. For example, the biannual international conference on "Media, Religion, and Culture" usually draws from 300 to 600 people from around the world, virtually all carrying on research on media and religion from a cultural studies perspective. The cultural studies approach recognizes the importance of so-called "administrative research" used by broadcasters to measure the reach and effectiveness of programming, but argues that quantitative effects research really does not answer the central questions of religious media.

Religion is a personal response, seeking meaning in life and in one's universe. Religious expression is generally found within institutional religion, but the formal creed, rituals, devotions, and moral codes do not exhaust the personal experience of religion. The central question of the cultural studies approach is concerned with how individuals in groups use media to construct religious meaning in life and how this religious meaning relates to many other aspects of human life. This approach typically draws its theories and methodologies, not from psychology, functionalist sociology, or quantitative analysis, but from cultural anthropology, philosophy, literary studies, drama, and history. The methods of research are no less rigorous, but these are much closer to a tradition of humanities than to behavioral sciences.

Until the 1970s virtually all research on media and religion was attempting to answer the questions of religious broadcasters as to what effects they were having. Most religious programs claimed to be having large audiences-impressed with what one can do with the media compared to the Sunday sermon-and they generally claimed to be "converting " many people. Others were skeptical, and the research was brought in to settle this kind of dispute. Gradually, however, researchers moved away from these "effects" questions to how people are creating meaning from media ... and many other sources. How and why did this move to a new set of questions in research on religious media come about? The present essay will explore this question.

A. Effects studies-background

From the time the 1920s-era Payne Studies concluded that the "impact" of film depended very much on family background, the subjective cultural background, and other factors influencing the subjective interpretation of the meaning of the film (in Rowland, 1983, pp. 92-99), media researchers felt that they had to use quantitative, objective methods to show the positive or negative effects of media in order to get action by governments or other public institutions. One of the typical examples was the attempt to devise an "objective" measuring scale of violent content which rated violence from the low point on the scale of a heated discussion to the high point of a bloody murder. The researchers then attempted to show a direct correlation between

Japanese new religions shinshūkyō have used various media forms for training communicating with members presenting their messages reinforcing or protecting the image of the leader and potentially attracting converts In this book the complex and dual relationship between media and new religions is investigated by looking at the tensions groups face between the need for visibility and the risks of facing attacks and criticism through media Indeed media and new technologies have been extensively used by religious groups not only to spread their messages and to try to reach a wider audience but also to promote themselves as a highly modern and up to date form of religion appropriate for a modern technological age In 1980s and early 1990s some movements such as Agonshō Kōfuku no Kagaku and Aum Shinrikyō came into prominence especially via the use of media initially publications but also ritual broadcasts advertising campaigns and public media events This created new modes of ritual engagement and new ways of interactions between leaders and members The aim of this book is to develop and illustrate particular key issues in the wider new religions and media nexus by using specific movements as examples In particular the analysis of the interaction between media and new religions will focus primarily on three case studies predominantly during the first period of development of the groups

Practical Spiritualities in a Media Age Curtis Coats, Monica M. Emerich, 2015-11-19 We live in a media age where technologies become the sites and sources of our practices and beliefs including those deeper values that guide decisions about how we should live Practical Spiritualities in a Media Age explores how and why media become the site and source of spiritual expressions that address the mundane or everydayness of our lives Including international case studies and essays from leading scholars such as Stewart Hoover and Graham Harvey the book examines the ways and the places in which people have employed media and information technologies to weave spiritual meaning throughout the demands and pastimes of their lives Topics range from food and sex to spiritual tourism In doing so the volume takes up a call from Paul Heelas seminal work Spiritualities of Life to provide more examples more richness and more depth to the variety of spiritual practices that exist in late modernity Providing critical scholarly explorations of the complexities and contradictions of late modern spiritual practices Practical Spiritualities in a Media Age is a must read for anyone working in the intersection of media religion or spirituality and culture

The Oxford Handbook of Digital Religion Campbell, 2023-11-15 Digital Religion refers to the contemporary practice and understanding of religion in both online and offline contexts and how these contexts intersect with each other Scholars in this growing field recognize that religion has been influenced by its engagement with computer mediated digital spaces including not only the Internet but other emerging technologies such as mobile phones digital wearables virtual reality and artificial intelligence The Oxford Handbook of Digital Religion provides a comprehensive overview of religion as seen and performed through various platforms and cultural spaces created by digital technology The text covers religious interaction with a wide range of digital media forms including social media websites gaming environments virtual and augmented realities and artificial intelligence and highlights examples of technological engagement and negotiation within the major world religions i.e. Buddhism Christianity Hinduism Islam and Judaism. Additional sections cover the global manifestations of religious community identity ethics and authority with a final group of chapters addressing emerging technologies and the future of the field. Because of the interdisciplinary nature of the project the Handbook is led by co-editors representing the humanistic and social scientific fields of religious studies and communication though both also have experience in how those disciplines intersect.

Religion, Media and Conversion in Iran Sara Afshari, 2023-03-28. Religion Media and Conversion in Iran studies the reception of Farsi Christian television channels by Muslim audiences in Iran their motivations in viewing the Christian message their methods of interpretation and negotiation with different media texts and their process of changing or altering their religion. Rooted in empirical research it analyses three hundred narratives drawn from the audiences of four Farsi Christian satellite television channels between 2010 and 2015 investigating their conversion to Christianity through that medium. The research examines factors that influenced both their interpretations of and negotiations with the religious media message and their process of changing adding to or modifying their belief system including their understanding of religious conversion. Drawing on Reception Theory the book investigates the negotiations between meaning making and mediation and the process of faith transformation against the background of the sociology of religion and culture in contemporary Iran. By offering a unique insight into the way in which media and religion influence each other this book is a great resource for any scholar of Religious Studies Media Studies and Middle East Studies and will also be useful for religious media practitioners.
