country to the present day a period covering more than three centuries the former province has been often visited by whites but the remoteness of Tusayan and the arid and forbidding character of its surroundings have caused its more complete isolation The architecture of this district exhibits a close adherence to aboriginal practices still bears the marked impress of its development under the exacting conditions of an arid environment and is but slowly yielding to the influence of foreign ideas The present study of the architecture of Tusayan and Cibola embraces all of the inhabited pueblos of those provinces and includes a number of the ruins traditionally connected with them It will be observed by reference to the map that the area embraced in these provinces comprises but a small portion of the vast region over which pueblo culture once extended
