Social Psychology and Personality

Topic 4.1 - Attribution Theory & Person Perception

1. What is an attribution in social psychology? An explanation or reasoning a person gives for why a certain behavior or event occurs.
2. Describe the difference between dispositional and situational attribution. Dispositional attribution explains a behavior as being caused by internal traits. While situational attribution explains a behavior as being influenced by external factors.
3. What is the attribution theory? A theory that explains how people interpret and assign causes to the behavior of themselves and others. Behaviors are explained by either dispositional or situational attribution.
4. Complete the table below.

Term	Description	Example
Self-serving bias	The tendency to attribute personal successes to dispositional attributions and failures to situational attributions.	A student says, "I got an A on the test because I'm smart", but if they failed they say, "I failed the test because the teacher made it too hard".
Actor-observer bias	The tendency to attribute our own behavior to situational attributions while attributing others' behavior to dispositional attributions.	When you're late, you blame the traffic, but when someone else is late you think that they are lazy and irresponsible.
Fundamental attribution error	The tendency to overemphasize dispositional attributions and underestimate situational factors when explaining another person's behavior.	You see a coworker arrive late to a meeting and think, "They're so lazy and disorganized," instead of considering they might have been stuck in traffic.

5. What is an explanatory style? This is how individuals consistently explain the causes of events in their lives (Think of it as a mindset).
6. Explain the difference between a person having an optimistic and pessimistic explanatory style. A person with an optimistic style will often credit positive outcomes to internal factors and negative outcomes to external factors. The individual believes good things happen to good people. While a person with a pessimistic style often will credit positive outcomes to external factors and negative outcomes to internal factors.
7. Define locus of control. An individual's belief about how much control they have over the events and outcomes in their life.
8. Explain the difference between internal and external locus of control. Individuals with a high internal locus of control believe that their actions, decisions, and efforts determine the outcomes of their life. While an individual with a high external locus of control believe that outside factors are what are responsible for what happens to them in life.
9. Complete the table below.

Concept	Description	Example
Mere exposure effect	A phenomenon where an individual develops a preference for something simply because they are familiar with it (The more familiar you become to something the more you gravitate towards it).	You hear a new song and dislike it, but after hearing it multiple times on the radio, you start to enjoy it.
Social comparison	The process of evaluating oneself by comparing them to others.	You compare your AP Psychology test scores to the scores of your classmates to determine how well you did.
Upward social comparison	The process of comparing yourself to someone who is better off or more skilled.	A college basketball player compares their own skills to other individuals in the NBA, hoping to learn from them.
