Chadwick, John E. Grassie, 2016. Jocelyn Chadwick and John Grassie explore how the familiar literature we love can be taught in a way that not only engages students but does so within the context of literacy instruction which reflects the needs of today's students. They address complex questions secondary English teachers wrangle with daily: where does literature live within the Common Core's mandates? How can we embrace informational texts in our literature classrooms? And most importantly, how can we help students recognize how canonical works are relevant to them. Response & Analysis Robert E. Probst, 2004. This book broadens and extends our available teaching tools and materials and can help engage all students. It is a valuable resource for language arts teachers. Cris Tovani. Language arts teachers want all of their students to love literature and embrace the novels they assign. The classroom reality is that many students are not ready or motivated to immerse themselves in an entire novel. In order to reach and engage all students, teachers need to look beyond novels alone and embrace a richer variety of literature. In Less Is More, Kimberly Hill Campbell draws on research as well as her own classroom experiences to show how short texts engage a wide range of middle and high school students. She shares her discovery of the power of short texts to support her students' skills as readers, writers, and students of literature. Kimberly shows how short texts can be integrated into the curriculum without sacrificing required novels Chapters examine different genres of short text such as short stories essays memoir and graphic novels Each chapter provides reading writing and response strategies as well as a broad selection of short text resources that have proven effective with a wide range of students
