

MISCONDUCT AND REPUTATION UNDER IMPERFECT INFORMATION

Abstract

Misconduct – market actions that are unethical and indicative of fraud – is a significant yet poorly understood issue that underlies many economic transactions. We design a field experiment to study the impact of two-sided anti-misconduct information programs, which we deploy on the local markets for mobile money (Human ATMs) in Ghana. The programs lead to large reduction in misconduct (–21pp=–72%) and as a result, broader improvements in overall market activity, consumer welfare, and firm revenue. We show the treatment effect is due to a combination of more accurate consumer beliefs about misconduct and increased vendor reputation concerns.

Keywords: forensics and information (D83), vertical markets and reputation (L14, Z13), household finance (D14, O12), consumer protection (D18), firm behavior and growth (L26, L13)
