Sport in Asia and Africa Eric A. Wagner, 1989-11-16 Why sports What is their function in society how are they organized and why do people participate This groundbreaking volume is filled with descriptive data relating to these questions and many others and it does what none has done previously by bringing together an edited collection of essays that describe and compare sport in twelve Asian and African nations from a social science perspective Written by an international team of anthropologists sociologists political scientists and physical educators these chapters are not accounts by scholars viewing sport from afar each writer is either a native of the country or has spent extensive time there teaching and or conducting research For ease of comparison each chapter adheres to a common format beginning with an historical overview of the development of sport in that country that focuses on indigenous traditional sports the development of modern sports and the place of contemporary sports A description of the way sports are organized follows and includes discussions of the role of schools and government involvement Next where data were available the authors evaluated levels of sports participation including such variables as age gender social class and urban or rural residence An account is also presented of the nature of participation and success of the country in international sports competitions Each chapter closes with an insightful appraisal of the future of sport in that country Seven figures and more than 25 tables facilitate comparisons as does the editor's introductory essay that provides an overview of the following chapters In the second introductory essay Ruud Stokvis examines the process of international diffusion of sport arguing that changes in sport participation patterns in countries over time reflect changes both in the world system and in the class structure of modernizing societies Sport in Asia and Africa makes its substantial contribution to social science literature by enhancing cross cultural understanding of sport as a vital social institution and its voluminous descriptive data will surely be a catalyst in the evolution of further theories about the interrelationship of sport and society A source of up to date sociological data Wagner's superb reference will be an important resource for libraries international studies programs programs dealing with Asia and Africa and physical education and sociology courses that examine sport in a comparative perspective football migration Paul Darby,James Esson,Christian Ungruhe,2022-01-25 The global success of football icons like Samuel Eto o Didier Drogba and Mohamed Salah has fuelled the migratory projects of countless young men across the African continent who dream of following literally and figuratively in their footsteps Drawing on over a decade of ethnographic research African football migration captures and chronicles the aspirations experiences and trajectories of those pursuing this highly prized form of transnational migration In doing so the book uncovers and traces the myriad actors networks and institutions that affect the ability of young people across the continent to realise social mobility through football s global production network The book sheds critical light on the barriers to social mobility erected by neoliberal capitalism and how these are negotiated by aspiring African footballers It also generates original interdisciplinary perspectives on the complex interplay between structural forces and human agency as young players navigate an industry rife with commercial speculation While a select few reach the elite levels of the game and build a successful career overseas the book vividly illustrates how for the vast majority trying their luck through football results in involuntary immobility in post colonial Africa These findings are complemented by rare empirical insights from transnational African migrants at the margins of the global football industry and those navigating precarious retirement from careers as players African football migration offers essential coverage of why and how African youth and young men have become actors in the global football industry revealing the complex implications of transnational mobility both imagined and enacted      Sport in Asian Society Fan Hong,J.A.
