

Geographic mosaic theory

Interactions coevolve as constantly changing geographic mosaics

Coevolution is prominent in some areas (coevolutionary hotspots) but not others (coevolutionary cold spots) that the outcome of an interaction can vary between areas and that gene flow can affect the outcome of interactions

Hypothetical example of a Geographic Mosaic of Coevolution between two species.
The coloured circles stand for biological communities; the arrows within the circles show interactions within local communities and represent selection on one or both (or none) species (truly reciprocal selection = hotspot). Selection among communities is generated from disparities in biotic or abiotic habitat quality. The arrows between the communities indicate gene flow (thicker arrows = more gene flow).
