The Missing Man Politics And The Mia:

The Missing Man Douglas Lane Clarke,1979 The Missing Man Douglas L. Clarke,1979 The thesis of this study is that the development of the MIA issue has been and continues to be inimical to the best interests of the United States the missing men and their families It is clear that the Government has a responsibility to both the men and their families Combat personnel should be assured that their families will not be placed in a limbo status for years should their death be undocumented In the Vietnam war the U S Government prolonged the grief of the MIA family while substantially increasing the benefits paid to the MIA wife compared to the widow These inequities do not cancel each other out nor is either one justified The matter of the missing men is an issue over which this government has little control and as such reduces American flexibility in dealing with Vietnam Also by creating expectations and demands that could never be met the United States has caused a bitterness toward the government by a small but significant number of American citizens Finally in the course of attempting to resolve this issue a U S President promised an economic commitment that he knew could not be met This action unnecessarily complicated future American Vietnamese relationships while reducing the stature of the Presidency and the credibility of American promises POW/MIA'S: April 10, May 7, and June 5, 1979 United States. Congress. House. Committee on Foreign Affairs. Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs,1979 Air University Review ,1978
