

The backswing plane, as seen from a top-down position. At the top of the backswing, the left arm should incline at the exact angle of the plane. The arm brushes against the plane pane.

The golfer gets on the downswing plane when he turns his hips to the left to initiate the downswing. The plane for the downswing is tilted at a shallower angle than the plane of the backswing, and its lateral axis runs slightly to the right of the golfer's target.

The Second Part of the Swing

To check if a golfer remains on his plane during his downswing, I stand behind him (facing down his line of flight) and stand my forearm and hand along the line of what would be his correct plane. When he swings back, I can then observe whether he stays on his plane, drops below it or lifts his arms above the plane.
