Reading Together and Apart Laura A. Heymann, 2017 This response to Zahr K Said's A Transactional Theory of the Reader in Copyright Law 102 Iowa L Rev 605 2017 joins her in supporting a reader centered view of copyright infringement but asks whether within the bounds of reasonableness any particular reading can be privileged over any other If a juror sees a suave man calmly battling villains while driving a sports car and says that the character copies James Bond how do we know if she is right What if she sees Jason Bourne instead Professor Said's insightful article relying largely on Louise Rosenblatt's theory of efferent and aesthetic reading encourages us to pay more attention to how jurors and judges engage with artistic works but copyright doctrine's failure to put more meat on the bones of substantial similarity inevitably limits the effectiveness of any guidance jurors might receive. Thus I suggest more attention should be paid to how jurors and judges function as scholars and critics that is how they converse with one another about their acts of reading and attempt to persuade others that their reading is correct. We are as Professor Said thoughtfully reminds us engaged in constant acts of reading. Her calls for more open conversations both inside and outside the courtroom about how we read are well worth heeding. The process by which we read engage and interpret both together and apart should be the next set of experiences that copyright law should take into account. *California. Its nine chapters dwell on copyright trademarks patents industrial designs and the legal protection of intellectual property in Nigeria. Attempt is made at providing an overview of the law relating to the subject in order to facilitate a solid grounding in the law as a starting point from which various political theoretical or other perspectives can be developed. There is substantial reliance on the relevant Nigerian statutes on copyright trademarks patents and industrial designs as contained in the Laws of the Federation 2004 and also on the reported cases decided in this area of our law by Nigeria courts over the years. References have also been made to the case and statutory laws in some other jurisdictions especially where Nigerian legislative enactments need a reform. It is very simple and comprehensive and not solely aimed at providing a basis just for undergraduates but also for postgraduate courses in addition to being useful to teachers lawyers judges magistrates and even non lawyers or general readership.
