10.1 Introduction

Employees' knowledge is critical for the long-term sustainability of organisations that are dependent on knowledge, technology and information. Their skills, expertise and experience provide organisations with knowledge-focused employees who need to be developed and retained for organisational success. Therefore, developing and sustaining a workforce is important. Talent and retention management is a systematic process that requires proactively planning to avoid talent surpluses or shortages. This necessitates forecasting talent needs and the availability of talent. Such planning has to integrate recruitment, retention, redeployment, leadership and employee development. This is especially important in South Africa in view of the brain drain (high levels of skilled labour emigrating overseas), shortage of skills in the workforce and the legacy of an apartheid education system based on unequal educational opportunities.
