"Writing is so complex an activity, so closely tied to a person's intellectual development that it must be furthered and practiced over all the years of a student's schooling and in every curricular area."

—Dr. Barbara Walworth

MISSION STATEMENT

As stated in the University Policy Manual, "CSU is committed to the development of sound reading and writing skills" by having "... effective writing skills" as a desired learning outcome for students in departments by the College for University Learning, and the Faculty Senate in its Advisory Writing Standard, stated that writing and reading skills, "a critical general learning outcome for all students" are key learning outcomes for a CSU graduate. In a 2002 faculty survey, 77.6% of faculty reported that the quality of student writing is "extremely important" to student learning outcomes, and another 16.3% reported that it was "important" improving student reading and writing ability is clearly a priority for both faculty members and administrators at California State University, Sacramento.

The goal of Writing Across the Curriculum (WAC) is to help administrators, departments, and individual faculty members to improve learning and writing performance. The central faculty will expand reading and writing design and assessment. The University Reading and Writing Coordinator acts as an academic support role in a collaborative faculty. This role is part of a central faculty member's role in the faculty to have for improving their students' reading and writing. The University Reading and Writing Coordinator, the significant role in Academic Affairs, is part of the full writing group.

- Annual Reading, Writing and Writing Assessment Conference
- Summer faculty development retreat
- Campus-wide and departmental workshops on topics such as assigning and responding to student
