Introduction to Chapter 1

Bangladesh has one of the lowest per capita levels of income in the world and faces formidable development problems. It is often regarded as providing an acid test for development policies, and it highlights many of the issues facing the least developed countries in the world (Faaland and Parkinson, 1976). Bangladesh's economy is overwhelmingly agricultural and this sector most reflects the country's poverty. The agricultural economy of Bangladesh provides a useful case study of peasant agriculture under conditions of abject poverty, growing landlessness, an extremely unfavourable land-man-ratio and complex socio-economic and natural factors. The country's agrarian base, its inability to produce enough food to feed its growing population, the overwhelming size of its rural population and the fact that vast majority of this population lives near or below the subsistence level make sustainable growth in agriculture a sine qua non for its sustained economic development (Myrdal, 1968; Johnston and Mellor, 1961).

The major development influence on Bangladeshi agriculture and its economy in recent times has been the introduction of 'Green Revolution' technologies. These biochemical land-saving technologies, which are usually water or irrigation demanding, have transformed food production throughout Asia and have done much to raise rural productivity and alleviate poverty. These technologies, however, were introduced in Bangladesh later than in most other parts of Asia, including India, and appear to have been less studied in the Bangladeshi context than elsewhere. The aim of this book is to help to rectify this shortcoming.

This book concentrates on Bangladesh's economic and social experience with the introduction of Green Revolution technologies. These technologies have brought about considerable socio-economic change in Bangladesh. It is useful to identify these changes and to compare and contrast Bangladesh's

Mohammad Alauddin, Samiul Hasan, 2016-07-27 The worst chemical disaster ever could be happening right now In India and Bangladesh between forty and eighty million people are at risk of consuming too much arsenic from well water that might have already caused one hundred thousand cancer cases and thousands of deaths Many millions elsewhere in South East Asia and South America may soon suffer a similar fate Venomous Earth is the story of this tragedy the geology the biology the politics and the history It starts in Ancient Greece touches down in today's North America and takes in William Morris alchemy farming medicine mining and a cosmetic that killed two popes

Bangladesh's Quest for Inclusive Development Mustafa K. Mujeri, Neaz Mujeri, 2022-09-30 The book provides a comprehensive conceptual understanding covering major challenges and pathways to progressively promote inclusive development in Bangladesh Since independence in 1971 Bangladesh has achieved significant economic growth and social progress but the benefits have not been shared equitably across all groups in society and there is the demand that inclusive development should be at the core of the country's development agenda Analysing inclusive development in Bangladesh the authors present it as synonymous with improving the well being of all individuals in a comprehensive manner along with upholding the principles of equity and justice The book shows that the multidimensionality of inclusive development facilitates the participation of all in society in development through enhancing capabilities and ensuring equal opportunities The analysis highlights social investments in specific concerns of the marginalised and disadvantaged groups and unequal structural forces that compel the state to remain biased towards the rich and consequent elite capture of the state in Bangladesh Arguing that Bangladesh has moved closer towards applying the inclusive development tenets in policy making the book's findings show that the challenge is the absence of any generic formula to ensure that the country is moving towards a more inclusive development path A valuable contribution to the study of Bangladesh's changing dynamics of political economic and social configurations and development economics the book will be of interest to researchers in the fields of economics Asian studies and development studies

Since Jonathan Harwood,2012-05-04 How best to foster agricultural development in the Third World has long been a subject of debate and from a European perspective the persistent failure to design peasant friendly technology is puzzling From the late 19th century for example various western European countries also underwent green revolutions in which systematic attempts were made to promote the adoption of technological innovation by peasant farmers This book focuses on the development of public sector plant breeding in Germany from the late nineteenth century through its fate under National Socialism Harwood uses this historical case study in order to argue that peasant friendly research has an important role to play in future Green Revolutions Bangladesh at Fifty Mustafa K. diverse experience of Bangladesh s development over the last fifty years and provides systematic explanations of its success in socioeconomic development It also assesses future trends on the basis of past experiences It is widely acknowledged that Bangladesh provides one of the most striking examples in the study of present day development along with rapid growth and catching up The analysis highlights the development traps that Bangladesh faced during its journey and the ones that may have to be faced in the coming decades in order to move towards prosperity The book asserts that explaining Bangladesh s development is not for the simpleminded any single mono causal explanation for Bangladesh s development is bound to fall down in the face of reality This book will be of interest to academics students policy makers and development practitioners especially in developing countries in particular in South Asia and Bangladesh Nature and Impact of the Green
