E-Learning in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) Region Alan S. Weber, Sihem Hamlaoui, 2018-02-27. In the last decade, due to factors of ICT infrastructural and broadband maturation, rising levels of educational attainment, and computer literacy, and diversification strategies, e-learning has exploded in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) region. However, significant barriers remain in the region: e-learning development, lack of research on outcomes and effectiveness, paucity of Arabic language learning objects, monopolies, and high cost of telecommunications, cultural taboos, accreditation, censorship, and teacher training. This unique volume is the first comprehensive effort to describe the history, development, and current state of e-learning in each of the 20 MENA countries, from Algeria to Yemen. Each entry is expertly written by a specialist who is acutely familiar with the state of e-learning in their respective country and concludes with a bibliography of key reports, peer-reviewed books, and articles, and web resources. E-Learning in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) proves itself as a vital compendium for a wide readership that includes academics, students, transnational program directors, international education experts, MENA government departments, commercial vendors, and investors, and ICT development and regulatory agencies involved in e-learning in the Middle East.

State Power 2.0 Muzammil M. Hussain, 2016-04-01. Digital media and online social networking applications have changed the way in which dissent is organized, with social movement leaders using online applications and digital content systems to organize collective action, activate local protest groups, network with international social movements, and share their political perspectives. In the past, authoritarian regimes could control broadcast media in times of political crisis by destroying newsprint supplies, seizing radio and television stations, and blocking phone calls. It is much more difficult to control media in the digital age, though there have certainly been occasions when states have successfully shut down their digital networks. What causes state powers to block internet access, disable digital networks, or even shut off internet access? How is it done? What is the impact, and how do dissidents attempt to fight back? In this timely and accessible volume, a collection of high-profile international scholars answer these key questions using cases from Israel, Iran, Russia, Morocco, Vietnam, and Kuwait, and assess the political economy of the actors, institutions, and regimes involved and effected by the state management and control of digital networks.

Arabizing the Internet Jon W. Anderson, 1998-06-09. The Internet is a complex of technologies and applications not all of which are interrelated or develop at the same stage Widely viewed as the first wave of an Age of Information it is constantly being reshaped by new users Advocates of the Internet see a structure of decentralized communication as the model of a new universal culture and social organization of information that will sweep cultural differences Such reflections on the cultural future of the Internet are as much a part of the phenomenon as its technological and organizational features The Internet is not one thing but several a physical infrastructure the software and protocols that make it work the tasks and values that the software and protocols implement a social organization of regulation and communities of use and a cultural context that includes reflection upon communication information and knowledge As the Internet spreads alternative local and regional models emerge Overseas Arabs brought Arab culture and politics to the Internet while it was developing in academic and research settings But it is commerce and telecommunications developments that now bring the Internet to Arab countries The Arabization of the Internet draws on the competing priorities and visions of relations between local orders and global processes

The Politics of Divination Eugene L. Mendonsa, 2000-09 The Politics of Divination first published in 1982 was a ground breaking work in the political economy of an African culture the Sisala of Northern Ghana The author shows how elders use divination as a political tool to control the behavior of women and young men Gerontocratic control through ritual means is an attempt by elders to dominate the economic activities of youthful men and the production and reproduction of women Yet the elders are not entirely successful in such attempts and their efforts at social control sometimes have less than altruistic motives as the many cases in the book show The author presents divination and ancestral sacrifice in a processual view Within the context of the divinatory process strategizing elders work and rework the rules of their society to deal with real life situations illness misfortune and death Like many other Africans the Sisala believe that such misfortunes are ultimately caused by ancestral anger which can be seen as a reflection of social tension and conflict among the living Divination points out deviants in the family who are poised as the cause of such misfortunes and this conflict is rectified through ancestral propitiation via blood sacrifice on family shrines
