Cutler,2000-06-15 Who holds ultimate authority for the education of America s children teachers or parents Although the relationship between home and school has changed dramatically over the decades William Cutler s fascinating history argues that it has always been a political one and his book uncovers for the first time how and why the balance of power has shifted over time Starting with parental dominance in the mid nineteenth century Cutler chronicles how schools growing bureaucratization and professionalization allowed educators to gain increasing control over the schooling and lives of the children they taught Central to his story is the role of parent teacher associations which helped transform an adversarial relationship into a collaborative one Yet parents have also been controlled by educators through PTAs leading to the perception that they are company unions Cutler shows how in the 1920s and 1930s schools expanded their responsibility for children s well being outside the classroom These efforts sowed the seeds for later conflict as schools came to be held accountable for solving society s problems Finally he brings the reader into recent decades in which a breakdown of trust racial tension and parents rights have taken the story full circle with parents and schools once again at odds Cutler s book is an invaluable guide to understanding how parent teacher cooperation which is essential for our children s educational success might be achieved      Proceedings of the New York State Teachers Association ... schools will attain academic excellence encourage individual student performance and achieve social balance In debating the feasibility of this market approach to improving school systems analysts have focused primarily on schools as suppliers of education but an important question remains Will parents be able to function as smart consumers on behalf of their children Here a highly respected team of social scientists provides extensive empirical evidence on how parents currently do make these choices Drawn from four different types of school districts in New York City and suburban New Jersey their findings not only stress the importance of parental decision making and involvement to school performance but also clarify the issues of school choice in ways that bring much needed balance to the ongoing debate The authors analyze what parents value in education how much they know about schools how well they can match what they say they want in schools with what their children get how satisfied they are with their children s schools and how their involvement in the schools is affected by the opportunity to choose They discover most notably that low income parents value education as much as if not more than high income parents but do not have access to the same quality of school information This problem comes under sensitive thorough scrutiny as do a host of other important topics from school performance to segregation to children at risk of being left behind

Leaving No Child Behind? Frederick M. Hess, Chester E. Finn, Jr., 2004-10 NCLB is the signal domestic policy initiative of the Bush administration and the most ambitious piece of federal education legislation in at least thirty five years Mandating a testing regime to force schools to continually improve student performance it uses school choice and additional learning resources as sticks and carrots intended to improve low performing schools and districts The focus is on improving alternatives to children in low performing schools Here top experts evaluate the potential and the problems of NCLB in its initial stages of implementation This first look provides valuable insights offering lessons crucial to understanding this dramatic change in American education
