

Interview:
Protagonists
by Tobi

How did the idea come up to do this? Is there a theme?

Alena: When you decide to do a film, there's this big idea that you have. Usually, this is about the central character in the film, what his or her story is all about. And then you have to think about how to tell the story in a way that's interesting and that's not too long. It's about the story, the characters, and the way you tell the story.

How do you decide the story? Do you have a script? Do you have a director?

Tobi: When you have a story, you have a script. And then you have a director. The director is the person who decides how to tell the story. He or she decides the camera angles, the lighting, and the editing. The director is the person who makes the film.

How long does it take to make a film? Is it a long process? Do you have a budget?

Alena: It takes a long time to make a film. It's a long process. You have to write the script, find the money, find the crew, and then you have to shoot the film. It's a long process.

Is it a long process? Do you have a budget? Do you have a crew?

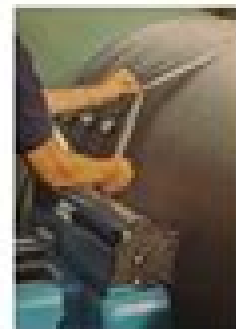

Alena: Yes, it is a long process. You have to write the script, find the money, find the crew, and then you have to shoot the film. It's a long process.
