"There was no feminine liberation movement in Arizona at the end of the nineteenth century, but there might have been with a few more citizens like Carrie.... Nice girls just didn't go into saloons, not even to see an Indian mummy, but Carrie did. And while many girls are interested in spiritualism, very few are acknowledged as mediums because they are nice, sensible creatures.... [T]he details of period and locale are vivid, and the author has created a family and a community that are believable and enjoyable."

THE GREAT DESERT RACE

"Baker's lighthearted comedy is set in the Southwest at the turn of the century; it's the story of two best friends, 16-year-old Trudy and Alberta, who become a driving team in the Great Mountain to Desert Automobile Race.... The history lesson is an unanticipated by-product... and the tale is first and foremost a piece of effervescent entertainment."

SEVEN SPELLS TO FAREWELL

"Add the appeals of a runaway orphan, a talking raven, a performing pig and a gypsy-style caravan, and you have the palatable ingredients for a nicely crafted fantasy in which odds are overcome and magic contributes to a successful quest."
