Patients at risk as NHS urgent repair costs triple in decade

- ◆ Backlog bill rises to £2.7bn in 10 years
- ◆ 600 days of clinical time lost in last year

Michael Savage
Policy Editor

A decade-long failure to address urgent repairs in hospitals across England has led to a dramatic rise in issues posing a "high risk" to patients and staff, ministers are being warned.

The cost of dealing with this backlog has almost tripled since 2015 in real terms, to £2.7bn this year. High-risk repairs have been the fastest growing part of the lengthy maintenance list over that time. It includes ongoing issues that could lead to serious injury to both staff and patients, or major disruption of services or to "catastrophic failure".

The NHS lost more than 600 days – or 14,500 hours – of clinical time because of infrastructure failures in the last year, according to a new analysis seen by the Observer. The total maintenance backlog has now ballooned to £3.5bn in 2023-24, an 18% increase from last year. The figure is more than the NHS's entire capital budget for the year.

There were 32 incidents of lost clinical time a day on average, according to the analysis of official data by the House of Commons library. Close to 60% of the time lost was due to incidents deemed to be the most clinically impactful, including faulty roofs, water leaks, and broken lifts or heating systems. There were 1,516 "critical incidents" recorded, the most severe kind.

Heidi Morgan, the Liberal Democrat health and care spokesperson who commissioned the House

Anger at plans for 41 'dirty' incinerators

Jon Ungless-Thomas

Labour faces a growing backlash across the country over proposals to build a new generation of more than 40 waste incinerators to burn household and commercial rubbish.

Communities are fighting plans for the new energy-from-waste incinerators which have been called the UK's dirtiest form of power. The plants, some of which can burn more than 50,000 tonnes of rubbish a year, are sited in more deprived areas.

There are already about 50 waste incinerators across England, but new figures reveal a further 41 have been given planning permission. Of these, 27 have already been granted environmental permits and some are already under construction.

Millions are expected to protest new curbs on waste incinerators tomorrow, as they face growing public concern over their impact.

Campaigners want the government to revoke the permits of the incinerators which are not yet under construction and ban any new projects.

Sharon Davies, from the UK Without Incineration Network, the campaign group which collated the figures on projects in the pipeline, said: "There are already far too many waste incinerators across the UK, meaning that most of what is burned
