Visionaries and Planners Stanley Buder, 1990-07-26

For nearly a century the Garden City movement has represented one end of a continuum in an ongoing debate about the future of the modern city. In 1898 Ebenezer Howard envisioned an experimental community as the alternative to huge teeming cities. Small planned garden cities girdled by greenbelts were to serve in time as the master key to a higher more cooperative stage of civilization based on ecologically balanced communities. Howard soon founded an international planning movement which ever since has represented a remarkable blend of accommodation to and protest against urban changes and the rise of the suburbs. In this interconnected history of the Garden City movement in the United States and Britain Buder examines its influence strengths and limitations. Howard's garden city he shows joined together two very different types of late nineteenth century experimental communities creating a tension never fully resolved. One approach utopian and radical in nature challenged conventional values the other the model industrial towns of enlightened capitalists reinforced them. Buder traces this tension through planning history from the nineteenth century world of visionaries philanthropy and self help into our own with its reliance on the expert bureaucracy and governmental policy shedding light on the complex changes in the way we have thought in the twentieth century about community urban design and indeed the process of change. His final chapters examine the world wide enthusiasm for New Towns between 1945 1975 and recent political and social trends which challenge many fundamental assumptions of modern planning.

Community Planning Phil

Heywood, 2011-05-06 This key planning textbook on designing healthy and sustainable communities informs planners about community life and the processes of planning and equips them with the essential knowledge and skills they need to organise change and improve the quality of urban living. The author examines the impacts of social and economic change on community life and organization and explores ways in which these changes can be planned and managed. Community planning is presented as a means to balance and integrate beneficial change with the maintenance of valued cultural traditions and life styles. This involves bringing together fields of study and practice including urban and regional planning design communication housing community organization employment transport and governance. Links drawn between personal values human activities physical spaces and societal governance assist this process of synthesis. Establishing a common vocabulary to discuss planning for urban and regional planners including health planners and open space planners enables both students and practitioners to work with each other and with those for whom they provide services to create stronger healthier and more sustainable communities. The aims and roles of community planning are explored and the key planning operations are explained including the phases and applications of community planning method the planning and location of community facilities the roles of design in shaping responsive community spaces and the capacity of different types of community governance to improve the relations between citizens and societies. The book is organized into two main parts after the first three chapters have established the interests and scope of community planning the next six each moves from an account of issues and theoretical concerns through a review of case studies to summaries of leading practice This positive approach is intended to encourage readers to develop their own capacities for effective participation and action The concluding chapter draws together the contributions of preceding ones to demonstrate the integrity of the community planning process

Britain's escalating housing crisis can be resolved only by a massive programme of planned decentralization from London at least equal in scale to the great Abercrombie plan seventy years ago. He sets out a picture of great new city clusters at the periphery of South East England sustainably self-sufficient in their daily patterns of living and working but linked to the capital by new high speed rail services. This is a book that every planner and every serious student of policy making will want to read. Published at a time when the political parties are preparing their policy manifestos it is designed to make a major contribution to a major national debate.
