

THE NINETEENTH OF APRIL, 1775

By
Harold Murdock

An account of the Battles of Lexington and Concord that gives a new, vivid, and (in many respects) strikingly different version of what occurred on the Nineteenth of April, 1775.

Writing after long study and careful investigation of old records, Mr. Murdock has at last succeeded in separating the thread of fact from the web of legend and tradition that has become woven about the events of that memorable April day when the first real blow was struck for American freedom.

The result is an important and intensely interesting contribution to the real history of America.
