I think you are wrong he replied there are still depend upon it quaint undiscovered countries and continents of strange extent. Ah Miss Lally believe me we stand amidst sacraments and mysteries full of awe and it doth not yet appear what we shall be. Life believe me is no simple thing no mass of grey matter and congeries of veins and muscles to be laid naked by the surgeon's knife man is the secret which I am about to explore. The Novel of the Black Seal Illustrated Arthur Machen, 2021-01-25

The Novel of the Black Seal is a short story of a professor who discovers markings on some Welsh limestone that correspond to characters found in ancient Babylon. A man gradually uncovers the secrets of a race of pre-humans hiding in the Welsh hills and the true nature of a hybrid idiot child fathered by one of them. The Novel of the Black Seal and Other Stories Arthur Machen, 1965. The Novel of the Black Seal and Other Stories. My mother contrived to keep the small household going on resources which must have been incredibly small we lived in a remote country village because most of the necessities of life were cheaper than in a town but even so we were brought up with the severest economy. My father was a clever and well read man and left behind him a small but select collection of books containing the best Greek Latin and English classics and these books were the only amusement we possessed. My brother I remember learnt Latin out of Descartes's Meditationes and I in place of the little tales which children are usually told to read had nothing more charming than a translation of the Gesta Romanorum. We grew up thus quiet and studious children and in course of time my brother provided for himself in the manner I have mentioned. I continued to live at home my poor mother had become an invalid and demanded my continual care and about two years ago she died after many months of painful illness. My situation was a terrible one the shabby furniture barely sufficed to pay the debts I had been forced to contract and the books I dispatched to my brother knowing how he would value them. I was absolutely alone I was aware how poorly my brother was paid and though I came up to London in the hope of finding employment with the understanding that he would defray my expenses I swore it should only be for a month and that if I could not in that time find some work I would starve rather than deprive him of the few miserable pounds he had laid by for his day of trouble. I took a little room in a distant suburb the cheapest that I could find I lived on bread and tea and I spent my time in vain answering of advertisements and vainer walks to addresses I had noted. Day followed on day and week on week and still I was unsuccessful till at last the term I had appointed drew to a close and I saw before me the grim prospect of slowly dying of starvation. My landlady was good natured in her way she knew the slenderness of my means and I am sure that she would not have turned me out of doors it remained for me then to go away and to try to die in some quiet place It was winter then and a thick white fog fathered in the early part of the afternoon becoming more dense as the day wore on it was a Sunday I remember and the people of the house were at chapel At about three o'clock I crept out and walked away as quickly as I could for I was weak from abstinence The white mist wrapped all the streets in silence a hard frost had gathered thick upon the bare branches of the trees and frost crystals glittered on the wooden fences and on the cold cruel ground beneath my feet
