Tax cuts will backfire, top economists warn Hunt

Ex-Treasury aides say fiscal rules must go
Chancellor 'courting danger on UK debt'

Phillip Inman
& Taly Helen

Leading economists warn today that Jeremy Hunt will "cost the country dear" if he gambles on pre-election cuts to tax and spending in this week's budget.

Two former advisers to the Treasury said that instead of decisions aimed at "bolstering prospects for the next government", the chancellor should focus on the long-term national interest with measures to spur investment and growth.

In a statement to the Observer, Doulos Zingheris, a former head of economic forecasting at the Treasury, and Anna Valero, a former member of the chancellor's economic advisory council, said the country needed to break out of a cycle of debt-sterilism.

"Tax cuts to stimulate a pre-election consumer spending spree is the last thing the British economy needs and will cost us all dear", they said.

"For over a decade, economic short-termism and low and volatile investment has saddled the country with macroeconomic instability, stagnant living standards and one of the poorest productivity performances among major economies."

Warning against using the budget for political reasons and to satisfy demands from Tory MPs to slash spending and cut tax, they added: "Instead of sabotaging prospects for the next government, the chancellor should announce a package of measures to drive UK innovation and competitiveness, spur productivity and unlock new, intelligent and sustainable forms of growth."

Last night there were signs of tension between No 10 and the Treasury over tax and spend decisions, with Rishi Sunak said to be pushing harder for tax reductions.

Government sources said a move to reduce a planned rise in public spending for 2025 from 0.6% of GDP to 0.5% (which would raise £30bn

Fears over asthma drug side effects for children

Jon Ungood-Thomas

Children as young as three have suffered traumatic side effects from a blockbuster asthma drug now under review by the UK drugs regulator.

Families say asthma patients, including many children, are not properly warned of the risks from the commonly prescribed drug monebalan.

It has been associated with night terrors, depression and in rare cases hallucinations or suicidal behaviour.

The Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) confirmed this weekend it was reviewing the drug's risks after identifying "further concerns".

Tanya Hindle, from the monebalan UK action group, said: "Those affected have reported uncontrollable aggression, children attacking family members and suffering very intrusive thoughts. Tragically, there have also been attempted and reported suicides."

The UK action group for the drug, which represents nearly 3,500 members, is campaigning for more prompt warnings, tighter controls and support for those affected. It says patients should first consult a doctor if they have any concerns.

Graham and Alison Miller, whose son Harry, an asthma sufferer, took his life aged 14 in February 2019 while on the drug, are among the families calling for action. They learned of
