Supplements to this bibliographic record of the history of dermatology citations in English have been an ongoing project since the 1970s, appearing at 5-year intervals. The number of papers relating to historical aspects of the skin continues to be substantial.

The question may arise as to the necessity of such supplements, when access to the literature is readily available through PubMed and the search engines of several medical publishers. Although the majority of papers can be located with ease by these methods, biographical papers are often not indexed. In addition, some keywords are more peculiar to dermatology than to general medicine, which can result in omission of a citation. Lastly, several dermatology journals and newsletters are not indexed in the Index Medicus.

Beginning with this installment, references are recorded in the Vancouver style, as modified for Clinics in Dermatology.

Burton, Margaret Burton, 2018 Essential Fish Biology provides an introductory overview of the functional biology of fish and how this may be affected by the widely contrasting habitat conditions within the aquatic environment. It describes the recent advances in comparative animal physiology which have greatly influenced our understanding of fish function as well as generating questions that have yet to be resolved. Fish taxa represent the largest number of vertebrates with over 25 000 extant species. However, much of our knowledge apart from taxonomy and habitat descriptions has been based on relatively few of them, usually those which live in fresh water and/or are of commercial interest. Unfortunately, there has also been a tendency to base our interpretation of fish physiology on that of mammalian systems as well as to rely on a few type species of fish. This accessible textbook will redress the balance by using examples of fish from a wide range of species and habitats, emphasizing diversity as well as recognizing shared attributes with other vertebrates.
