History of the Thirty Years' War Friedrich Schiller, 1846 History of The Thirty Years War (Complete) Friedrich Schiller, 2020-09-28

From the beginning of the religious wars in Germany to the peace of Munster scarcely any thing great or remarkable occurred in the political world of Europe in which the Reformation had not an important share All the events of this period if they did not originate in soon became mixed up with the question of religion and no state was either too great or too little to feel directly or indirectly more or less of its influence Against the reformed doctrine and its adherents the House of Austria directed almost exclusively the whole of its immense political power In France the Reformation had enkindled a civil war which under four stormy reigns shook the kingdom to its foundations brought foreign armies into the heart of the country and for half a century rendered it the scene of the most mournful disorders It was the Reformation too that rendered the Spanish yoke intolerable to the Flemings and awakened in them both the desire and the courage to throw off its fetters while it also principally furnished them with the means of their emancipation And as to England all the evils with which Philip the Second threatened Elizabeth were mainly intended in revenge for her having taken his Protestant subjects under her protection and placing herself at the head of a religious party which it was his aim and endeavour to extirpate In Germany the schisms in the church produced also a lasting political schism which made that country for more than a century the theatre of confusion but at the same time threw up a firm barrier against political oppression It was too the Reformation principally that first drew the northern powers Denmark and Sweden into the political system of Europe and while on the one hand the Protestant League was strengthened by their adhesion it on the other was indispensable to their interests States which hitherto scarcely concerned themselves with one another's existence acquired through the Reformation an attractive centre of interest and began to be united by new political sympathies And as through its influence new relations sprang up between citizen and citizen and between rulers and subjects so also entire states were forced by it into new relative positions Thus by a strange course of events religious disputes were the means of cementing a closer union among the nations of Europe Fearful indeed and destructive was the first movement in which this general political sympathy announced itself a desolating war of thirty years which from the interior of Bohemia to the mouth of the Scheldt and from the banks of the Po to the coasts of the Baltic devastated whole countries destroyed harvests and reduced towns and villages to ashes which opened a grave for many thousand combatants and for half a century smothered the glimmering sparks of civilization in Germany and threw back the improving manners of the country into their pristine barbarity and wildness Yet out of this fearful war Europe came forth free and independent In it she first learned to recognize herself as a community of nations and this intercommunion of states which originated in the thirty years war may alone be sufficient to reconcile the philosopher to its horrors The hand of industry has slowly but gradually effaced the traces of its ravages while its beneficent influence still survives and this general sympathy among the states of Europe which grew out of the troubles in Bohemia is our guarantee for the continuance of that peace which was the result of the war As the sparks of destruction found their way from the interior of Bohemia Moravia and Austria to kindle Germany France and the half of Europe so also will the torch of civilization make a path for itself from the latter to enlighten the former countries All this was effected by religion Religion alone could have rendered possible all that was accomplished but it was far from being the SOLE motive of the war Had not private advantages and state interests been closely connected with it vain and powerless would have been the arguments of theologians and the cry of the people would never have met with princes so willing to espouse their cause nor the new doctrines have found such numerous brave and persevering champions The Reformation is undoubtedly owing in a great measure to the invincible power of truth or of opinions which were held as such The abuses in the old church the absurdity of many of its dogmas the extravagance of its requisitions necessarily revolted the tempers of men already half won with the promise of a better light and favourably disposed them towards the new doctrines The charm of independence the rich plunder of monastic institutions made the Reformation attractive in the eyes of princes and tended not a little to strengthen their inward convictions Nothing however but political considerations could have driven them to espouse it Had not Charles the Fifth in the intoxication of success made an attempt on the independence of the German States a Protestant league would scarcely have rushed to arms in defence of freedom of belief but for the ambition of the Guises the Calvinists in France would never have beheld a Conde or a Coligny at their head Without the exaction of the tenth and the twentieth penny the See of Rome had never lost the United Netherlands Princes fought in self defence or for aggrandizement while religious enthusiasm recruited their armies and opened to them the treasures of their subjects Of the multitude who flocked to their standards such as were not lured by the hope of plunder imagined they were fighting for the truth while in fact they were shedding their blood for the personal objects of their princes
