

The Commission began its work in 1971 to mark an end to the talks proposed by the times of South North and North Korea. Red Cross negotiations continued for the moment of a formal agenda and an agreement alternately in the capitals and in Seoul. The South Korean delegation left in 1972, and the North Korean delegation reached in Seoul by September 17, 1972.

But in the interim, a breakthrough made. It was revealed that high-ranking South Korean government had been meeting reached a seven-point agreement as a preliminary talks.

The seven points stated in essence that serious achieved by Korean efforts, but of course, full means, and transcending differences of government; that the two sides would stop armed provocation; that various exchange established; that both sides would accept current Red Cross talks; that a direct dialogue established between Seoul and Pyongyang in break of unexpected military incidents and dealing directly with problems which might arise South coordinating committee would be established these proposals.

For the first time in nearly thirty years the had been broached by other than intelligence vocateurs.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea came into being during the same period as the ROK. During the transition period of military government the Soviet armies in the north very gradually built on the system of committees that had been established by the Koreans to maintain civil order after the Japanese surrender. During the transition to local Korean control these "people's committees" were more and more brought under Communist control. Operating at county, city, and provincial levels, the committees in turn sent representatives who made up the Provisional North Korean People's Committee. This body unanimously elected Kim Il Sung chairman and drafted necessary legislation for the operation of government as well as adopting a draft constitution modeled on that of the Soviet Union. National elections were then held in the north; in November, 1946, a single list of candidates to serve as delegates to a convention of the people's committees was presented to the voters. The convention, held in February, 1947, approved the legislation and constitution presented by the Provisional People's Committee. They also elected the North Korean People's Assembly as the supreme legislative organ of the government. On the same day, February
