Statistical Methods for Spoken Dialogue Management Blaise Thomson, 2013-01-08. Speech is the most natural mode of communication and yet attempts to build systems which support robust habitable conversations between a human and a machine have so far had only limited success. A key reason is that current systems treat speech input as equivalent to a keyboard or mouse and behaviour is controlled by predefined scripts that try to anticipate what the user will say and act accordingly. But speech recognisers make many errors and humans are not predictable: the result is systems which are difficult to design and fragile in use. Statistical methods for spoken dialogue management takes a radically different view. It treats dialogue as the problem of inferring a user's intentions based on what is said. The dialogue is modelled as a probabilistic network and the input speech acts are observations that provide evidence for performing Bayesian inference. The result is a system which is much more robust to speech recognition errors and for which a dialogue strategy can be learned automatically using reinforcement learning. The thesis describes both the architecture, the algorithms needed for fast real time inference over very large networks, model parameter estimation and policy optimisation. This ground breaking work will be of interest both to practitioners in spoken dialogue systems and to cognitive scientists interested in models of human behaviour.

Time and the Museum Jen A. Walklate, 2022-07-25. Time and the Museum Literature Phenomenology and the Production of Radical Temporality is the first explicit in depth study of the nature of museum temporality. It argues as its departure point that the way in which museums have hitherto been understood as temporal in the scholarship as spaces of death, othering memory and history is too simplistic and has resulted in museum temporality being reduced to a strange heterotopia Foucault something peculiar and thus black boxed However to understand the ways in which museum temporalities and timescapes are produced and the consequences that these have upon display and visitor response is crucial because time is itself a political entity with ethical consequence Time and the Museum highlights something we all experience in some way time as a key ethical and political feature of the museum space Utilizing the fields of literature and phenomenology the book examines how time is experienced and performed in the public areas of three museum spaces within Oxford the Ashmolean Pitt Rivers and Oxford University Museum of Natural History Using concepts such as shape structure form presence absence authenticity and aura the book argues for a reconsideration of museum time as something with radical potential and political weight It will appeal to academics and postgraduate students especially those engaged in the study of museums culture literature and design
