

FACTS ABOUT CARDIOVASCULAR SYSTEM

WHAT IS IT ?

The heart and circulatory system (also called the cardiovascular system) make up the network that delivers blood to the body's tissues.

With each heartbeat, blood is sent throughout our bodies, carrying oxygen and nutrients to all of our cells.

The circulatory system is composed of the heart and blood vessels, including arteries, veins, and capillaries.

Our bodies actually have two circulatory systems:

The pulmonary circulation is a short loop from the heart to the lungs and back again, and the systemic circulation (the system we usually think of as our circulatory system) sends blood from the heart to all the other parts of our bodies and back again.

Veins (blue)

A vein is an elastic blood vessel that transports blood from various regions of the body to the heart.

Superior vena cava

The superior vena cava (also known as the cava or cva) is a large diameter, yet short, vein that carries deoxygenated blood from the upper half of the body to the heart's right atrium.

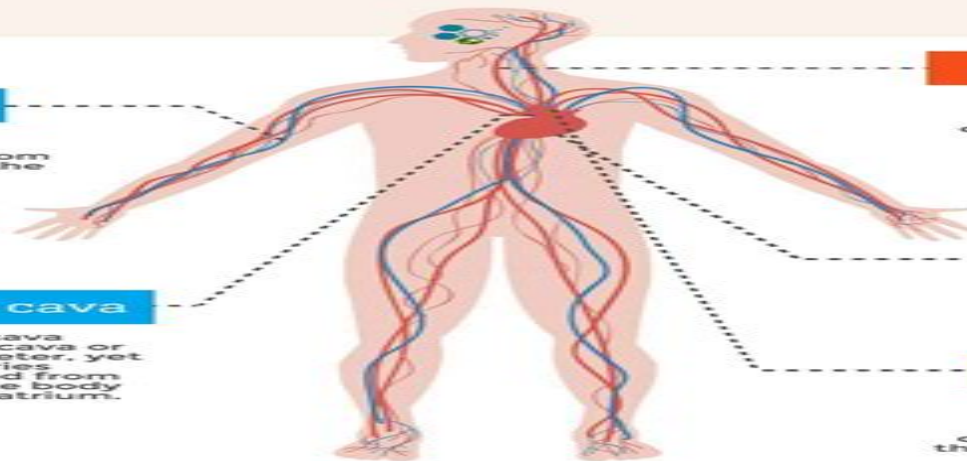

Arteries (red)

The arteries deliver the oxygen-rich blood to the capillaries where the actual exchange of oxygen and carbon dioxide occurs.

Heart

Aorta

It serves to supply them all with oxygenated blood. The aorta is the central conduit from the heart to the body.

THE HEART

The heart is one of the most important organs in the entire human body. It is really nothing more than a pump, composed of muscle which pumps blood throughout the body, beating approximately 72 times per minute of our lives.

The heart pumps the blood, which carries all the vital materials which help our bodies function and removes the waste products that we do not need.

For example, the brain requires oxygen and glucose, which, if not received continuously, will cause it to lose consciousness.
