

Korean War

By Sungjin Kim

As the results of the conflicts between the nations at this time period, North Korea invaded South Korea on June 25, 1950. This sudden invasion aimed to unify Korea under a communist regime.

At this time period, both China and the Soviet Union saw North Korea as a strategic ally in expanding Communist influence in Eastern Asia. They started to support North Korea during this particular time period for their interests.

After North Korea's invasion, the United States and United Nations (UN) forces quickly came to South Korea's aid to be engaged and support the war on South Korea's side.

Despite the fierce fighting, the war reached a stalemate, with no decisive victory. An armistice was signed on July 27, 1953, halting the fighting but not officially ending the war.

Korea still remained divided into North and South at the 38th Parallel, creating a heavily fortified border. The Korean War was one of the significant events during the Cold War era in which it exemplifies the global struggle between Communism and Democracy/Capitalism.
