himself. And there were, of course, the patents that bore Leslie Irvin's own name.

It was actual gains, with patents as assets. The Irving company held most of the ace by the end of the 1920s, and played them with skill wherever their supremacy was threatened. When another company tried to play a card that it didn't hold, the Irving company would play a card that it didn't hold, the move was called in, in the lingo of a United States judge. Two major actions were brought against rival firms by Irving at this time.

In 1930 the case of Irving versus Russell was brought before Judge Morris of the United States Court of Delaware. The claim was for infringement of the Floyd Smith patents held by Irving. The defendant counter-claimed that the Smith patents were themselves invalidated by "prior art" - meaning that the concept themselves embodied had not been introduced by Floyd Smith nor of manual operation had not been introduced by Floyd Smith nor first demonstrated by Leslie Irvin, but dated back to the era of Ed and demonstrated by Leslie Irvin. The initial hearing Judge Morris brought together the greatest parachute technicians of the time. Charlie Broadwick and Les Stevens. The initial hearing together, Charlie Broadwick was there, and Leslie Irvin came from England. City Broadwick was there, and Leslie Irvin, and the whole of the original McCook team. Their statements under oath represent the most truthful account of statements under oath representing the most truthful account of statements during the last thirty years of the century. Judge Morris found in favour of Russell, but the decision was reversed in the appeals court. The Russell Parachute Company eventually went out of business in 1936.

In 1934 when Stanley Smith's company was making some small headway as a potential rival to the Irving monopoly in America, George West kept them in their place through a successful action for infringement of patents pertaining to rigging line storage systems and the ripcord handle - the only two details of the Smith Safety Chute that Floyd Smith had failed to design around.

It is doubtful, however, if the shareholders of the Irving management, their strong hand of patents, and the skill of their lawyers could alone have retained such a hold on the parachute industry. The proven quality of the product must be considered the primary reason why for twenty years the Irving Chute was virtually unchallenged. Had any other company been able to point to deficiencies in the Irving safety record, or had any of the same services had reason to doubt the reliability of the equipment, the story would have been different. The dice would then have been
