

History of Decorative Painting

For centuries, man has used decorative paint to enrich and beautify his rooms, both interiors such as his houses and exteriors, his facades, on furniture such as tables, chairs or cabinets or objects such as vessels, sarcophagi, shields, etc....

Decorative paint is what we apply to decorate some utilitarian object, for everyday use, we can talk about everything from a jug to a piece of furniture, that is, from a small to a large surface. It can be made of wood, metal, ceramic, fabric, etc.

Origins and evolution

Although its origins are sought in Europe, we can say, by analyzing its application, that it was born with the first civilizations, with primitive man, when he tried (whether to identify himself, mark his territory, belongings or situation or simply express himself) to leave His seal decorated the walls of the caves with scenes of hunting, rituals and customs of their daily life, using the blood and fats of animals, vegetable fats, ash and pigments that they extracted from the earth.

With the man himself it grew and perfected, thus using different materials. This is how each culture developed with its own stamp, hence the different styles of each region and each country. In all cases it is the intervention of the individual on the environment and the objects that surround him through an artistic expression that over time has been refined into techniques and styles.

The evolution of Painting in different everyday objects, including walls, develops simultaneously in different cultures.

Since ancient times we can find remains of decorative painting in Egypt, Greece and Rome, with the Romans being the ones who most successfully developed what we popularly know as mural painting. We have an example of this in Pompeii, where beautiful decorations with painting effects are still preserved. decorative painting: false reliefs, ornamental motifs, architectural elements; false columns and sculptures, plinths, imitations of marble...

There are times in history that, due to their condition of social and geographical changes in addition to wars, meant that the most disadvantaged layers of society had no place for decorative painting, thus leaving the religious power as the only one that could assume the economic and cost. finance the works of art (mostly religious themes), thus leaving great works of art; mural paintings, sculptures, furniture and altarpieces with gilded and polychrome wood carvings, etc.... A great example is the Renaissance era, 15th-16th centuries.

Little by little the human figure dominated artistic expression, arriving in the Renaissance (17th century). XV - XVII) to its maximum expression, together with the concept of perspective. This resource allows the representation of space in an exact way.
