The Death of Privacy? A. Michael Froomkin, 2016 The rapid deployment of privacy destroying technologies by governments and businesses threatens to make informational privacy obsolete The first part of this article describes a range of current technologies to which the law has yet to respond effectively These include routine collection of transactional data growing automated surveillance in public places deployment of facial recognition technology and other biometrics cell phone tracking vehicle tracking satellite monitoring workplace surveillance internet tracking from cookies to clicktrails hardware based identifiers intellectual property protecting snitchware and sense enhanced searches that allow observers to see through everything from walls to clothes The cumulative and reinforcing effect of these technologies may make modern life completely visible and permeable to observers there could be nowhere to hide The second part of the article discusses leading attempts to craft legal responses to the assault on privacy including self regulation privacy enhancing technologies data protection law and property rights based solutions in the context of three structural obstacles to privacy enhancement consumers privacy myopia important First Amendment protections of rights to collect and repeat information and fear of what other people may do if not monitored The article concludes that despite the warnings of information privacy pessimists all is not lost yet

Database Nation Simson Garfinkel, 2000-12-04 Fifty years ago in 1984 George Orwell imagined a future in which privacy was demolished by a totalitarian state that used spies video surveillance historical revisionism and control over the media to maintain its power Those who worry about personal privacy and identity especially in this day of technologies that encroach upon these rights still use Orwell's Big Brother language to discuss privacy issues But the reality is that the age of a monolithic Big Brother is over And yet the threats are perhaps even more likely to destroy the rights we've assumed were ours Database Nation The Death of Privacy in the 21st Century shows how in these early years of the 21st century advances in technology endanger our privacy in ways never before imagined Direct marketers and retailers track our every purchase surveillance cameras observe our movements mobile phones will soon report our location to those who want to track us government eavesdroppers listen in on private communications misused medical records turn our bodies and our histories against us and linked databases assemble detailed consumer profiles used to predict and influence our behavior Privacy the most basic of our civil rights is in grave peril Simson Garfinkel journalist entrepreneur and international authority on computer security has devoted his career to testing new technologies and warning about their implications This newly revised update of the popular hardcover edition of Database Nation is his compelling account of how invasive technologies will affect our lives in the coming years It's a timely far reaching entertaining and thought provoking look at the serious threats to privacy facing us today The book poses a disturbing question how can we protect our basic rights to privacy identity and autonomy when technology is making invasion and control easier than ever before Garfinkel's captivating blend of journalism storytelling and futurism is a call to arms It will frighten entertain and ultimately convince us that we must take action now to protect our privacy and identity before it's too late

how we value privacy and it remains unclear as to whether privacy can or should exist anymore Cyber security threats are a critical concern for businesses and governments with the use of internet communications by terrorists also posing a serious problem In this book Laura Toogood explores the impact of living in a fully integrated digital world where citizens can no longer opt out and where there are significant difficulties with providing resilient defence mechanisms She argues that what is needed is an international stance when considering the consequences of living in a world where in many cases technology is developing quicker than the human ability to adapt
