Race and Identity in Hispanic America Patricia Reid-Merritt, Michael S. Rodriguez, 2020-04-03 This book offers a historical and comparative overview of the evolution of racial classifications in the United States Latin America and the Caribbean The Hispanicization of America is precipitating a paradigm shift in racial thinking in which race is no longer defined by distinct characteristics but rather is becoming synonymous with ethnic cultural identity Traditionally assimilation has been conceived of as a unidirectional and racialized phenomenon Newly arrived immigrant groups or longstanding minority indigenous populations were Americanized in confining their racial and ethnic natures to the private sphere and adopting in the public sphere the cultural mores norms and values of the dominant cultural racial group In contrast the Hispanicization of America entails the horizontal assimilation of various groups from Spanish speaking countries throughout the Western Hemisphere and Caribbean into a pan ethnic Hispanic Latino identity that also challenges the privileged position of whiteness as the primary and exclusive referent for American identity Instead of focusing on one Hispanic group ethnic identity or region this book chronicles the development of racial identity across the largest Hispanic groups throughout the United States

The Higher Learning in America Thorstein Veblen, 2024-08-23 One test of a classic work of social criticism is to see if the critique's central logic and arguments remain generally applicable beyond the critic's own time One work that has lost little of its polemical power or social relevance is Thorstein Veblen's The Higher Learning in America First published in 1918 this volume sharply attacked the ascendancy of business values and concerns in America's universities In Veblen's critical analysis the institutions of higher learning have taken on the aspects of corporations and trusts relegating the pursuit of knowledge to secondary status Today when the mission of higher education is uncertain and universities compete for endowments and students this volume is as timely as ever Veblen was not only America's most famous economist and social critic but a distinguished academic as well having taught at major universities and the New School for Social Research His critique is built around an essential distinction between higher learning and career or vocational training Emphasizing the primacy of learning over training he repudiates the practice of appointing unqualified businessmen as governing trustees and condemns college administration conceived along corporate guidelines The entrepreneurial spirit in this instance understands learning as marketable knowledge and measures academic prestige in terms of needlessly elaborate building projects and material equipment Veblen's alternative vision severs the pursuit of knowledge and free inquiry from the institutional restrictions of economic interest Undergraduate colleges and professional schools are to be detached from the university while self governance among professors and students replaces boards of trustees and presidents Veblen's view of learning was tied to a larger conception of civilization in which an idly curious elite built and elaborated upon bodies of knowledge that sustained the practical institutions of society Ivar Berg's brilliant and stimulating introduction to this new edition offers a critical reading of Veblen's work in its own context and applies its arguments to controversies currently surrounding the American university The Higher Learning in America continues to be of interest to educators intellectual historians economists and sociologists
