

How does an historian look at historical evidence?

- Looks at WHO wrote something and tries to determine the reliability of the facts and determine any bias.
- Looks at evidence through an historical context.
- Historians look for all sides of the story and they recognize when only one side of the story has been told.

The What and the Why of History Goldstein, 2021-12-06 The What and the Why of History deals with history as a cognitive discipline concerned to establish justifiable knowledge about a past we can never experience It is divided into three parts The first focuses on the conditions that are presupposed when historians offer explanations of what they have come to know But whatever is to be explained must first come to be known and the second part is concerned with the character of the cognitive activity which is the constitution of the historical past The point is that we must attend to the historical enterprise on its own terms and not try to make it fit the epistemology of natural science or of common sense The last section deals with Collingwood It is shown that his characteristic positions contribute to an account of historical knowing not historical explanation
