

Fluid Balance & Filtration

The urinary system

The urinary system is responsible for three major functions in the body: removing wastes, removing excess water, and controlling acid-base balance in the blood. The individual components of the urinary system, kidneys, ureters, bladder, and urethra, each play an important role in these processes.

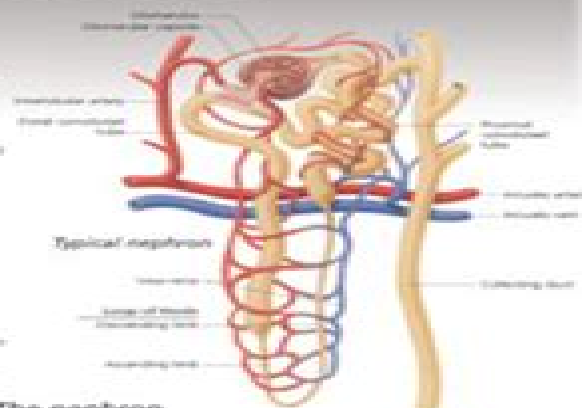

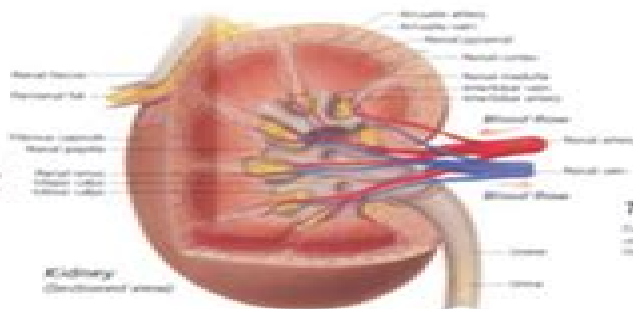

Urine formation begins within the functional units of the kidneys called nephrons. In nephrons, there are processes of filtration, reabsorption, and secretion. Secretion involves moving substances out of capillaries and into the general body fluid. Filtration involves moving substances out of capillaries and into the general body fluid. Secretion involves moving substances out of capillaries and into the general body fluid.

The kidney

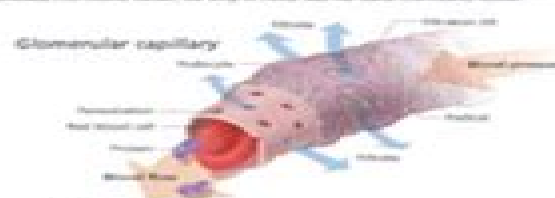

The kidneys are located on each side of the spine in the back of the abdominal cavity. Each kidney is approximately 10 cm long and weighs about 150 grams. The kidney is a bean-shaped organ with a hilum on the medial side where the renal artery and renal vein enter.

Within the kidney are two main regions. The outer part is the renal cortex, which contains the nephrons. The inner part is the renal medulla, which contains the renal pyramids. The renal pyramids are composed of renal tissue that filters blood and secretes substances into the renal tubules. The renal tubules are composed of renal tissue that filters blood and secretes substances into the renal tubules.

The nephron

Each kidney contains more than a million nephrons. The nephron is the functional unit of the kidney. It is a tube that filters blood and secretes substances into the renal tubule. The nephron is composed of a glomerulus, Bowman's capsule, and renal tubule.

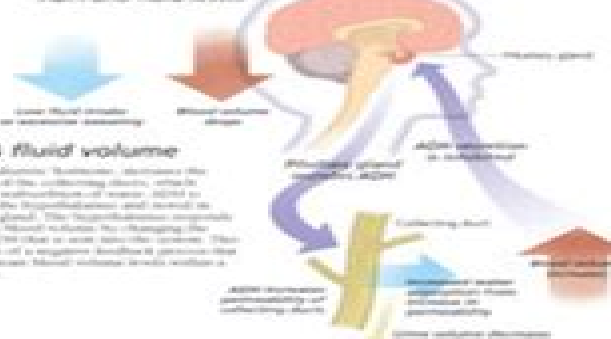

Filtration

As blood flows through the glomerular capillary, blood pressure forces a fluid out of the capillary and into the Bowman's capsule. This fluid is called the filtrate. The filtrate is composed of water, electrolytes, and small molecules. The filtrate is then reabsorbed into the blood or secreted into the renal tubule.

The outer wall of the Bowman's capsule is composed of podocytes, specialized cells with long processes, or pedicels, that wrap around the glomerulus. The podocytes are connected by tight junctions, which prevent the filtrate from leaking out of the Bowman's capsule.

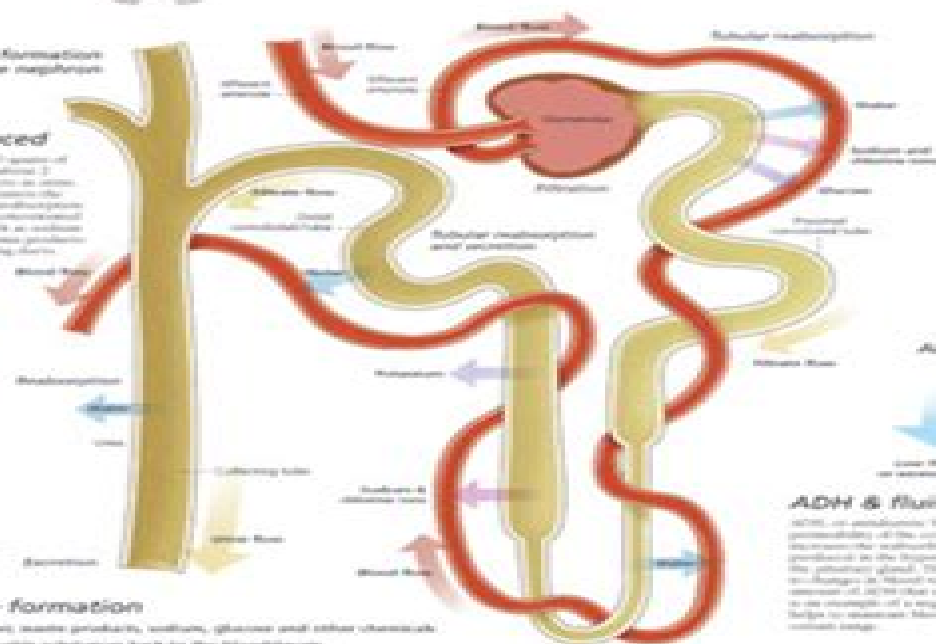

ADH and fluid levels

ADH & fluid volume

ADH, or antidiuretic hormone, decreases the permeability of the collecting ducts, which decreases the reabsorption of water. ADH is produced in the hypothalamus and stored in the posterior pituitary gland. The hypothalamus responds to changes in fluid volume by releasing ADH. The release of ADH is stimulated by a decrease in fluid volume.

Filtrate formation in the nephron

How urine is produced

The kidneys produce an average of 1.5L of urine per day. Urine is produced by the filtration of blood in the glomerulus. The filtrate is then reabsorbed into the blood or secreted into the renal tubule. The filtrate is then reabsorbed into the blood or secreted into the renal tubule.

The composition of urine

Key stages of urine formation

- Filtration - Filtration of water, waste products, sodium, glucose and other chemicals.
- Reabsorption - Movement of water, sodium, glucose and other chemicals back into the bloodstream.
- Secretion - Transport of waste products from capillaries around the renal tubule back into the renal tubule for removal with the urine.
