Tourism as a Tool for Development P. Díaz,2013-10-30 Some researchers perceive tourism as a process which creates dependency and causes loss of socioeconomic and environmental control and is harmful to traditional sociocultural structures For others it is clearly an opportunity for development and convergence among societies The main consequences of tourism are economic sociocultural and socio ecological ones These directly affect the natural and cultural landscape as well as the inhabitants of the destinations Proper management can unite the local community strengthen the historical memory and promote the recognition that the landscape is a legacy worth preserving If local people can learn to appreciate the need for regulation and careful development of cultural tourism then it is possible to have an alternative to the strategies of convenience based upon the view of tourism only for profit Designing tourism to serve heritage and local sustainable development not only helps to conserve the resources that make it possible but also complies with the ethical duty to guide social perception towards awareness and respect which in turn will lead to sustainability By means of case studies and theoretical developments the authors attempt to present methods designed to minimise the impacts of tourism and encourage its positive effects Some ideas in the book discuss the role of local communities their participation in development management the singularities of community tourism planning local governance and the relationship between socio economic benefits and impacts

Roads in the Deserts of Roman Egypt Maciej Paprocki,2019-07-19 Egypt under the Romans 30 BCE 3rd century CE was a period when local deserts experienced an unprecedented flurry of activity In the Eastern Desert a marked increase in desert traffic came from imperial prospecting quarrying activities and caravans transporting wares to and from the Red Sea ports In the Western Desert resilient camels slowly became primary beasts of burden in desert travel enabling caravaneers to lengthen daily marching distances across previously inhospitable dunes Desert road archaeology has used satellite imaging landscape studies and network analysis to plot desert trail networks with greater accuracy however it is often difficult to date roadside installations and thus assess how these networks evolved in scope and density in reaction to climatic social and technological change Roads in the Deserts of Roman Egypt examines evidence for desert roads in Roman Egypt and assesses Roman influence on the road density in two select desert areas the central and southern section of the Eastern Desert and the central Marmarican Plateau and discusses geographical and social factors influencing road use in the period demonstrating that Roman overseers of these lands adapted remarkably well to local desert conditions improving roads and developing the trail network Crucially the author reconceptualises desert trails as linear corridor structures that follow expedient routes in the desert landscape passing through at least two functional nodes attracting human traffic be those water sources farmlands mines quarries trade hubs military installations or actual settlements The route of least resistance across the desert varied from period to period according to the available road infrastructure and beasts of burden employed Roman administration in Egypt not only increased the density of local desert node networks but also facilitated internodal connections with camel caravans and transformed the Sahara by establishing new or embellishing existing nodes effectively funnelling desert traffic into discernible corridors Significantly not all desert areas of Egypt are equally suited for anthropogenic development but almost all have been optimised in one way or another with road installations built for added comfort and safety of travellers Accordingly the study of how Romans successfully adapted to desert travel is of wider significance to the study of deserts and ongoing expansion due to global warming
