Guernsey,1945-01-01 PERHAPS I may as well begin this book by telling how I came to write it at all Lady Corbet my mistress I suppose I ought to say mine honored mistress but I sha n t I am going to have the comfort of speaking my mind in these pages if nowhere else But to begin again in a more orderly fashion Lady Corbet with whom I am living as waiting gentlewoman companion and general butt for ill humors there I go again well Lady Corbet took it in her head to give me the use of this cabinet She was making a tour of inspection of the whole house to which we have just removed and had been put into a better humor than was usual with her so early in the day by finding in this very cabinet a purse with three gold pieces and some silver left here I suppose by Sir Charles s first wife poor pretty Lady Jemima whose portrait by Lely hangs in the great parlor My lady clutched the purse as a dog snaps at a bone and dropped it into her pocket Then she took up a knot or favor of rose colored ribbon spangled with silver which lay beside it still fresh and pretty and smelling of roses like every thing else in the cabinet See there child said she turning to me The poor bedizened thing had to leave all her finery and fallals behind her when she went to the grave There is a lesson for you And her money also madam said Mrs Williams her woman who had followed us with a light cloak which she laid about Lady Corbet s shoulders Mrs Williams is not afraid of my lady as I am But then she can leave when she pleases What do yo you mean Williams asked my lady Of course I know that We must leave every thing behind us when we die You have heard me say that a thousand times Not quite every thing said Mrs Williams I think my lady this would be a good room for Mrs Dolly It is not near enough for her to disturb you and yet she can hear when you whistle My heart jumped at this proposal but knowing my lady I was careful not to show any pleasure On the contrary when Mrs Williams appealed to me I answered It would do well enough I supposed Well enough Yes I think it will do well enough and too well for a chit like you since it has served an earl's daughter in its time said my lady tartly You shall have this room and no other do you hear And you can have this cabinet to keep your finery in Yes I have so much finery I could not help saying Oh you are not so badly off as all that answered my lady One would think you had not clothes to your back Mrs Dolly will need some new gowns my lady said Mrs Williams I had better buy her a camlet for Sundays and some stuff for every day Nonsense You can make over my gray camlet for her if she needs it However I don't mind for once Here child is a guinea for you and mind you take care of it You were best let Williams buy your gowns however There I won't go any farther to day Tell Jeremy to bring your mail up here and you can be putting your things in order while I am resting But don't disturb me with your noise and be ready to read to me when I wake This conversation took place the day before yesterday on which day my Lady Corbet removed from her own house where she has lived ever since she became a widow to this which was the mansion of her late husband Sir Charles Corbet She has never been here before since his death but has lived in her own house in the city But the land having become valuable and this house standing empty she all at once made up her mind to remove The house was already furnished so it was no great trouble For some reason which I don't understand it has never been lived in since Sir Charles died and was damp and dingy enough But a few charwomen under Mrs Williams's active superintendence soon gave it another aspect and now it is nice and pleasant and even my lady admits is far more sunny and healthful than her city abode For my part I am glad of the change with all my heart It is a change for one thing and I have had but little variety heretofore Then we are at the court end of the town not far from Whitehall and there is a deal of coming and going of fine equipages and of well dressed ladies and gentlemen Best of all I can see from mine own window a good piece of the park and of the water where the king keeps his tame fowls They say he walks there early every morning so if I rise soon enough I may chance to see him To return to my story I unpacked my mail which was no heavy task seeing I have so few personal belongings and then set myself to examine the cabinet It is large and very pretty inlaid with ivory and brass work and having many drawers and compartments I discovered nothing save a few old fashioned trinkets in a private drawer some odds and ends of ribbon and lace and a great heap of letters and bills very few of which were receipted There were two or three cupboards in the room And on the top shelf of one of these I deposited all the papers meaning to look over the letters at my leisure
