

The Legend of Sleepy Hollow

Ichabod Crane was a schoolmaster in the Hudson Valley in the last part of the American Revolution. He was a highly educated man but his many talents he believed to be gifts. Although he was tall and had the same mark on his forehead as the ghost, he was popular with the ladies and was looked on by the community as a worthy farmer and school teacher. He was the father of a healthy family and Ichabod became known as the "old man" of the village. He was, however, was also known for his great skills and courage. The lady, however, was also known for her great skills and courage. The lady, however, was also known for her great skills and courage. The lady, however, was also known for her great skills and courage.

One in September night Ichabod was returning from a party. Crossing Sleepy Hollow he became extremely nervous. He saw a large figure in the night about the place. It was said that the figure was known to the ghost of a Hessian soldier whose head had been knocked loose during the Revolution. Fearing along bravely on his way, Ichabod decided to keep his eyes open. He was imagined he could see ghostly shapes among the bare branches of the trees growing in this dark night.

He continued the path of his horse, instead a herd in the road and saw the shape of a figure on a huge black horse leaping in the air. To his horror, he realized that no head was atop the horseman's neck. He was, however, he carried a jack-o'-lantern under one arm. He was, however, he carried a jack-o'-lantern under one arm. He was, however, he carried a jack-o'-lantern under one arm. He was, however, he carried a jack-o'-lantern under one arm.

The next day Ichabod was missing. The townspeople searched for him and found his horse at the church and bits of a smashed jack-o'-lantern, but they never saw Ichabod again. Some say that the Headless Horseman managed to carry him off, others that Brom Bones had dressed as the Horseman to scare Ichabod away from Katrina. What do you think?

Guide Ichabod and his quaking horse out of the hollow, across the stone bridge and to the church without encountering any of the specters, especially the Headless Horseman.
